MATT JUUL, NATIONAL FEATURES EDITOR

It's been more than a month since Boston won the 2018 World Series, but the victory tour is still going strong. While spring training is right around the corner, Red Sox manager Alex Cora doesn't mind keeping the party going just a little longer before the team embarks on another season. During another celebratory event in honor of the team's championship run, we caught up with Cora to talk about the historic win, what he's looking forward to in 2019 and more.

CHRISTIE AMONG CHIEF OF STAFF CANDIDATES

1 President Donald Trump is considering Republican Rep. Mark Meadows, former campaign adviser David Bossie, and former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie for White House chief of staff, a source familiar with the search said on Monday. Another source said Trump was also looking at U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer for the job. The search comes after the president's initial choice for the job bowed out and as his White House braces for an onslaught of political and legal challenges in the coming year. On Saturday Trump announced that his current chief, General John Kelly, would be leaving the White House at the end of the year. The two men had clashed for months. Trump's initial pick for the job, Nick Ayers, pulled out on Sunday. Ayers, who is Vice President Mike Pence's chief of staff, had agreed to come on for an interim period but declined to commit to stay for the remaining two years of Trump's term. The new chief of staff will have to navigate a challenging political environment as Trump begins his third year in office and prepares for a 2020 re-election campaign.

ACCUSED RUSSIAN AGENT POISED TO PLEAD GUILTY

2 A former Russian agent accused of trying to infiltrate the National Rifle Association and influence U.S. policy toward Russia is expected to plead guilty this week following a deal between her lawyers and U.S. prosecutors, according to court filings on Monday. Exactly how the deal will be structured for defendant Maria Butina and whether or not Butina may agree to cooperate with prosecutors was not immediately clear. U.S. District Judge Tanya Chutkan in Washington scheduled a hearing for Dec. 12. Former American University graduate student Butina had previously pleaded not guilty to U.S. charges in July that she was acting as an agent of the Russian government and conspiring to take actions on Russia's behalf. Prosecutors have accused her of working with a Russian official and two U.S. citizens to try to infiltrate the powerful NRA lobby group that has close ties to Republican politicians including President Donald Trump, and influence Washington's policy toward Moscow. One of the two Americans mentioned in the prosecutors' criminal complaint was Paul Erickson, a conservative U.S. political activist who was dating Butina.

DYLANN ROOF ADMIRER CHARGED IN BOMB PLOT

4 An Ohio woman who corresponded with Charleston, South Carolina, church shooter Dylann Roof was charged on Monday with planning to bomb a Toledo, Ohio, bar, prosecutors said. Elizabeth Lecron, 23, was accused of purchasing gunpowder and screws that the FBI said she intended to use in an "upscale mass murder" at the bar, U.S. Attorney Justin Herdman said in a statement. Lecron came to the attention of police this year after an associate expressed a desire to conduct an attack. Investigators found a number of social media posts by Lecron glorifying mass murderers, including Roof and the Columbine High School shooters. She visited Columbine High School this year and exchanged letters with Roof, attempting to send Nazi literature to the avowed white supremacist, according to an affidavit filed in the case. Roof was sentenced to death for the 2015 killing of nine worshipers at an African-American church in Charleston. In discussions with undercover FBI agents, Lecron also talked about an attack to free farm animals, bombing a pipeline and attacking her workplace.

BREXIT IN TURMOIL AS UK'S MAY PULLS VOTE

5 British Prime Minister Theresa May on Monday postponed a parliamentary vote on her Brexit deal to seek more concessions, but the European Union refused to renegotiate and lawmakers doubted her chances of winning big changes. May's abrupt move less than 30 hours before parliament was to vote opens up a range of possibilities from a Brexit without a deal, a last-minute agreement or another E.U. referendum. Admitting she faced defeat on Britain's potentially biggest political and economic shift since World War II, May was laughed at by some lawmakers when she said there was broad support for key aspects of her deal reached with the E.U. last month. However, "If we went ahead and held the vote tomorrow, the deal would be rejected by a significant margin," she told parliament of the agreement she clinched after 18 months of tortuous negotiations. With her position in jeopardy, May said she would now go back to the E.U. and seek reassurances over the so-called Irish "backstop," an insurance policy to ensure no return to a hard border on the island of Ireland.

The party isn't over for Alex Cora

"I'm not sick of celebrating," the Red Sox manager says of the team's World Series victory tour.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

The World Series celebrations continued last week, as Red Sox manager Alex Cora and World Series MVP Steve Pearce joined fans for a special event hosted by Mastercard at Laugh Boston.

Wednesday's festivities featured video highlights from the team's amazing season, appearances by the Red Sox's four World Series trophies, plus a conversation with Cora and Pearce as they gave fans a peek inside their latest championship run. While Cora has spent the better part of the last month celebrating their World Series win, the Red Sox manager isn't tired of all the partying just yet.

"I'm not sick of celebrating," Cora jokingly told Metro during last week's event.

Ahead, we chatted with Cora about his favorite moments from the victory tour, what he's looking forward to in 2019, and more.

Alex Cora and Steve Pearce at last week's Mastercard event. JOHN GILLOOLY/PROFESSIONAL EVENT IMAGES

What's been your favorite moment from the World Series celebrations so far?

Obviously the two parades, the one here and the one back home [in Puerto Rico]. Different scales, different vibes, but they were awesome. They were great. Very loud here. A lot of music and food back home. Those two moments, they were great. We were looking forward to doing that, [giving] that to the fans, and we were able to come through.

What was the one moment from last season where you first thought, OK, this is a World Series-caliber team?

There were a few, but in Seattle we got no-hit that Saturday. The second game of the series we got no-hit. The next day, we didn't play Mookie [Betts], we didn't play Hanley [Ramirez], we didn't play our regulars. All of the people were asking why. Well, we were mapping the season out to have them ready for October. A lot of people were surprised because we got no-hit and we had a chance to win the series on Sunday, but they didn't play. That was important for everybody in the organization to understand that this is how we're going to do things. The players believed in it and we stuck with the plan, and it worked.

The 2019 season is right around the corner. Is there anything that the team needs to work on or something you're looking forward to going into next year?

Keep getting better. That sounded very [Bill] Belichick. We do feel that there's a few guys that can take another step forward. Guys that, they're going to contribute coming from the minor leagues. People don't believe that we have a good minor league system. We believe we do. We've got some arms. As you guys saw, we were able to pull some trades with what we had in the minor leagues, the three guys that we traded for who were very impactful.

I think as far as information and the way things are going in the organization, when you think about it, it was a sprint last year. I got here, I got to meet a lot of people in a short period of time. Now I feel more comfortable. Although it seems like we're not having an offseason, we [are]. We're working hard to put a good team on the field and I can't wait to go to Seattle and start the journey again.

You've been a vocal advocate for the people of Puerto Rico in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria. What's something that you believe people still need to know about the situation there that isn't being talked about much?

I don't know if this is a good way to compare it, but we don't need Band-Aids. We need to actually think in the long run. If we're going to fix things, it's not only for now. We need to fix it so when the next Maria comes, we're prepared. Our infrastructure is old, to be honest. We still have to keep working. Whatever help we can get is more than welcome, but I think it should be that way. We have to do better as far as what we're doing back home. Hopefully we can do it.

Trump calls hush money payments a 'simple private transaction'

Democrats say the president may face impeachment.

Donald Trump on Monday defended hush money payments reported by his former lawyer, responding a day after Democratic lawmakers said the president could face impeachment and jail time if the transactions are proven to violate campaign finance laws.

Trump said on Twitter that Democrats were wrongly targeting "a simple private transaction." Court filings last week drew renewed attention to six-figure payments made during the 2016 presidential campaign by Trump's personal lawyer to two women so they would not discuss their alleged affairs with the candidate.

U.S. Rep. Jerrold Nadler, who will lead the Judiciary Committee when Democrats take control of the House of Representatives next month, said on Sunday that if the payments were found to violate campaign finance laws it would be an impeachable offense.

His Democratic counterpart on the Intelligence Committee, Rep. Adam Schiff, said Trump could be indicted once he leaves office and could "face the real prospect of jail time."

Under U.S. law, campaign contributions, defined as things of value given to a campaign to influence an election, must be disclosed. Such payments are also limited to $2,700 per person.

Earlier this year, Trump acknowledged repaying his former lawyer Michael Cohen for the $130,000 paid to porn star Stephanie Clifford, also known as Stormy Daniels. He previously disputed knowing anything about the payments.

On Monday, the president again denied wrongdoing and sought to shift any blame to Cohen. One post misspelled the word "smoking" twice, drawing criticism and ridicule on Twitter.

"Democrats can't find a Smocking [sic] Gun tying the Trump campaign to Russia after James Comey's testimony. No Smocking [sic] Gun … No Collusion," he wrote, referring to Fox News comment on the case.

"So now the Dems go to a simple private transaction, wrongly call it a campaign contribution, which it was not," Trump wrote. He said that even if it were a campaign contribution, it would amount to a civil case, adding, "but it was done correctly by a lawyer and there would not even be a fine. Lawyer's liability if he made a mistake, not me."

Trump has denied affairs with Stormy Daniels and the other woman who Cohen said was given hush money, former Playboy model Karen McDougal.

U.S. prosecutors on Friday sought prison time for Cohen, Trump's self-proclaimed "fixer," for the payments they said were made in "coordination with and at the direction of" Trump, as well as on charges of evading taxes and lying to Congress.

The case stemmed from a federal investigation into alleged Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election and possible collusion with Trump's campaign. Russia has denied interfering and Trump has said his campaign did not cooperate with Moscow.

Legal experts are divided over whether a sitting president can be charged with a crime, as well as on whether a violation of campaign finance law would be an impeachable offense. REUTERS

Spark your curiosity with these unexpected community college courses

When is it too late to indulge in your curiosity? One day you could be well into a perfectly "fine" career and look up to realize that what you are doing on a daily basis just isn't really putting your creativity to the test. What is the one thing that you wish you'd put in the effort and really gone for? Fortunately for you, it is never too late to make a professional pivot.

But what can you do if you are still hesitant to drop everything in your professional life and enroll in school, full-time? If this is where you are, you can always take advantage of courses at your local community college to see if the subject material of these courses whets your appetite in a way that sparks your interests more than just a pipe dream that should stay that way. Here are some out-of-the-box and unexpected courses you can take at some of the local community colleges in your area.

Acting courses at Roxbury Community College

Acting for the stage and screen can be one of those things that can be hard to break into, and even harder to devote the time that some conservatories require of their students. That's why taking courses at a community college as a way to "dip your toe in the water" might be a more pragmatic and realistic approach for those who have that desire to be up on the stage while also maintaining a 9-to-5 day job. Roxbury Community College in Roxbury Crossing, Mass., offers several different courses that can make it easy for people to get an understanding of what it takes to perform for the camera and command the attention of an audience. For instance, their course Acting for Stage and TV will shape students' basic voice, movement, and articulation techniques in order to have a more composed approach to public speaking. Who knows, this kind of re-alignment of one's overall posture could translate to their everyday life and even seep into their careers if they find that acting isn't really their thing.

Video game design at Bristol Community College

When you play video games, does your fascination go beyond beating levels to wanting to know how they are built from the original idea to the screen? Well, as it turns out, learning the skills to become a video game developer is almost as accessible as walking into your local Gamestop and shelling out the cash for a copy of "Red Dead Redemption 2."

By enrolling in Bristol Community College's Associate in Science in Computer Information Systems (Game Development-Game Creation Concentration), you will be introduced to an involved curriculum that will help you create your own playable worlds and help to prepare you to find entry-level jobs within the video game industry. The program offers such standard courses like Electronic Game Development I & II, Programming for Game Developers I & II, Level Building, and Game Production. In the last two semesters of the program, students will break off into teams in order to create and pitch ideas for their very own video games in an interactive assignment that closely mirrors the industry. Who knows, maybe you will stumble upon the idea that could be the next "Fortnite." PAT KING

Parents struggling to repay college loans, report finds

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

Parents are increasingly shouldering the student loan burden and risking their financial health to do it, according to a new report from the Brookings Institution, a nonprofit public policy organization.

In its analysis of debt taken on through the federal parent PLUS loan program, Brookings found that:

- Balances owed by parents have more than tripled over the last 25 years.
- 1 in 11 parent borrowers owes more than $100,000.
- Default rates have increased sharply.
- Fewer parents are making headway in paying off the debt.

Parent PLUS loan borrowers now collectively owe nearly $87 billion, or 6% of all outstanding federal student loans, according to federal data.

PLUS loans for parents are different from the federal loans taken out by undergraduate students. For example, there is no cap on the amount that can be borrowed, other than the cost of attendance minus other financial aid. PLUS loans require a credit check, and they have higher interest rates and fees. They also come with fewer repayment options.

Repayment struggles could lead parent PLUS loans to default, which results in consequences ranging from ruined credit to garnished pay.

Where a student attends school matters

The worst rates of repayment are among parents whose children attend for-profit schools. Most of the for-profit schools with low repayment have been shut down or the subject of lawsuits regarding misleading practices, says Adam Looney, director of the Center on Regulation and Markets at Brookings and the co-author of the report.

ISTOCK

Among nonprofit schools, low repayment rates were mainly among parents of students attending historically black colleges and universities and Hispanic-serving institutions. These schools have a strong reputation, especially compared with for-profits, says Looney, and are mainly attended by underrepresented minority students.

Repayment challenges can lead to default

Federal loan servicers report missed payments to credit bureaus after 90 days. This will damage your credit, but the consequences of default — the point at which the loan is turned over to collections — are even worse.

Parent PLUS loans, like other federal student loans, default after 270 days without a payment.

A default will remain on your credit report for seven years, making it difficult to borrow for things like a new car or a home improvement. You'll miss out on options to lower or suspend payments. The government can also garnish or withhold your wages, Social Security benefits and tax refunds.

Parents PLUS borrowers are becoming more vulnerable to default. The five-year rate of default for a group of parents who began repaying in 2000 was 7%, but the rate increased to 11% for the group of parents who started repayment in 2009, according to the Brookings report.

There are a few things you can do to ease repayment and avoid default:

- Make sure your child maximizes federal student aid. This includes grants, scholarships, work-study and federal student loans.
- Opt for PLUS loans over private. They tend to carry lower interest rates and offer loan forgiveness and an income-driven repayment option.
- Borrow what you can afford. A good rule of thumb is to keep payments no higher than 10% of your after-tax monthly income. Use a parent PLUS loans calculator to estimate monthly payments.
- Don't request an in-school deferment. You can also save interest by beginning repayment immediately instead of asking to pause your payments through deferment while your child attends school.
- Enroll in an income-contingent repayment plan. If your payments are unaffordable, this plan will cap your payments at 20% of your monthly discretionary income and increase your term to 25 years. You'll need to consolidate PLUS loans to qualify.

Natalia Dyer explores a dark family secret in 'Mountain Rest'

The "Stranger Things" star opens up about her latest film.

Natalia Dyer is used to exploring the strange and the weird as Nancy Wheeler on the hit Netflix series "Stranger Things," but the 21-year-old star got the chance to unravel a different kind of mystery in her latest project, "Mountain Rest."

In the film, Dyer plays Clara, a teenage girl who goes on a trip with her mother Frankie (Kate Lyn Sheil) to visit Clara's eccentric grandmother Ethel (Frances Conroy) for the first time. After learning she only has months to live, Ethel wants to reconnect with her family and meet her granddaughter, so she invites them to her secluded cabin in the mountains for an elaborate party with her collection of oddball friends.

Over the course of the weekend, Clara discovers that her fun-loving, "Disneyland" grandmother harbors dark secrets that are seemingly behind Ethel's estrangement from her daughter Frankie.

"She's a bit of voyeur here," Dyer says of her character. "There's a lot that she doesn't know, so there's a lot to be explored and learned on her part."

Despite Ethel's sometimes unsettling behavior — such as talking to her deceased husband or having a live-in boyfriend half her age — Clara takes a liking to her grandmother and wants to get closer to her. At times, this puts Clara at odds with Frankie, although their rift is also fueled by your typical mother-daughter tensions.

Dyer could relate to Clara's relationship with Frankie, as she recalls not agreeing with her own mother on a lot of issues at that age.

"Clara's at that stage that I think most women go through when they're transitioning between being a girl and becoming a young woman. There's often some discord with the mom," says Dyer. "I love my mom dearly and I always have, but there was definitely that period where we couldn't really see eye to eye and yet we were so intertwined by this very special, familial mother-daughter relationship. It's just so push and pull.

"There's a bit of secrecy around Frankie's past and therefore Clara's past," she adds. "In some ways, getting closer to Ethel helps her get closer to Frankie in a deeper way."

According to first-time filmmaker Alex O Eaton, the story of "Mountain Rest" was inspired by her fascination "with people's right to choose to die," a "heavy subject" that plays a role in explaining Ethel's behavior during her family's visit.

it, there had been a lot of news about people being able to decide when they want to die," says Eaton. "God, this kind of sounds horrible, but it's not, because what was so inspiring to me about it was hearing about this one man in particular in The New York Times, who wrote about how once he made his decision, he regained all of his power because he controlled his own destiny again. He didn't let the cancer guide his life."

For Eaton, who previously worked as an assistant to Jonah Hill, "Mountain Rest" is a very personal film. Not only was it shot at her cabin in North Carolina, but the character of Ethel was inspired by her father's acting mentor as well.

"She was a very eccentric, kind of hippy actress lady," says Eaton. "Growing up, she amazed me and terrified me at the same time. That's exactly what Ethel does."

At its core, "Mountain Rest" is a female-driven project — both on- and offscreen — about three generations of women, which is what attracted Dyer to sign on to the film.

"It's an opportunity to be seized," Dyer says of working with so many other women on "Mountain Rest." "It was fantastic and a different environment than I had ever worked in before."

"Mountain Rest" is now in select theaters and is also available to watch on digital video services.

4 Reasons why you should keep your medical marijuana card

With hours-long lines reported at the opening of the state's first two recreational marijuana dispensaries, it may seem that the state's medical marijuana industry is about to go the way of the dodo. Though there are a number of challenges and possible upheavals ahead for the state's medical cannabis industry, this is not the time to space on renewing your medical marijuana card. Here are a few reasons why.

Medical customers can score big savings

The price-conscious among us might balk at springing for the $100 to $200 in annual fees required to maintain patient status. But consider this: Although recreational purchases in Massachusetts will be taxed at a rate of 17 to 20 percent (depending on local regulations), medical marijuana purchases are completely tax-free. That means, depending on how much you chief, you'd make up that annual registration fee cost in a matter of months, while reaping the discount benefits for the rest of the year.

State law also calls for medical dispensaries to provide "financial hardship" and other discounts to patients who need them. Caregivers throughout the state offer anywhere from an additional 10 to 25 percent off for certain customers, including whether they meet a certain poverty threshold, receive certain kinds of government assistance or are terminally ill, veterans, or seniors. If you qualify for the most generous of these programs, you could be paying over $100 less for an ounce.

A VIP line

The state's two recreational marijuana dispensaries — Leicester's Cultivate Holdings and Northampton's New England Treatment Access — are actually hybrid models, servicing both medical and recreational customers. State law requires that these kinds of outfits maintain two customer lines — separated by a physical divider — so medical patients can get extra time to consult with experts about their individual care needs. Of course, you're totally free to pick up your medicine in the recreational line, too, if you so choose.

Home delivery

If you hate lines, medical marijuana users have another time-saving benefit in their arsenal: door-to-door service. Medical dispensaries throughout the state offer delivery services to qualified patients, unlike recreational providers, who are prohibited from doing so. Just make sure to tip him and the pizza guy.

More access — at least for now

Right now, the state has over 30 medical marijuana dispensaries (with about a dozen in the Greater Boston area alone) and only two recreational providers, the closest being over an hour's drive from the city. While more recreational operations are expected to open in 2019, expect this ratio to stay high for at least a couple more years. CHRIS CAESER

Making sense of Pats' last-second loss

What can we take out of one of the worst regular-season losses in Patriots history?

JIMMY TOSCANO
sports@metro.us

The Patriots gave up a multilateral game-winning miracle to the Dolphins on Sunday afternoon. GETTY IMAGES

The Patriots' wild roller coaster ride of a season continued on through Miami on Sunday, and it was this latest loop-the-loop that had many fans barfing out the side of their carts.

In what has now been deemed the "Miracle in Miami" [eye roll], the Patriots quite literally stumbled to the finish line, where they face-planted into one of the most stunning losses in NFL history.

It's not often the Pats are on the wrong side of a historic loss (we don't talk about 18-1…), but the Dolphins' 69-yard multilateral touchdown was the longest game-winning touchdown with no time left in regulation in the Super Bowl era, according to Elias. The Pats have now made it extremely unlikely that they'll finish with the No. 1 seed in the AFC after Kansas City's comeback win on Sunday.

We're 14 weeks into the season and still learning about this team. So what's some of the good — and bad — we learned in Miami? We're going to start with the bad, because the Patriots deserve it.

THE BAD

Missed opportunities

It was a head-scratcher to watch Tom Brady take a third-down sack in the closing seconds of the first half with the Patriots on the Dolphins' two-yard line. Had he thrown the ball away, it would have at least brought up a fourth-down field goal attempt for Stephen Gostkowski (who had his own missed opportunities). It was even more shocking to hear Brady admit after the game that he thought the team had an extra timeout then. Brady prides himself on decision-making and execution, and that missed scoring chance obviously came back to haunt them.

Prevent D

You'll see the play on TV 100 more times this week, and again every time the Patriots play in Miami, so we won't harp on it too much. But please join us in asking: "What the [bleep] was Gronk doing out there?" Had Devin McCourty been in the game, this probably would have ended differently. It's not all on Gronk, though. Rookie DB J.C. Jackson is not going to enjoy the film session on that one. The entire secondary looked like they were waiting for Miami to go down on their own. Awful.

No place like home

The bad news is that the Patriots stink on the road. The worse news is that they're probably going to have to win a playoff game on the road now. The Chiefs have two games on them, and the Chargers have one game on them. The Pats will be tested on the road again next Sunday in Pittsburgh against a reeling Steelers team desperate for a win. New England is allowing 25.0 points per game on the road, 18th-most in the NFL, as all four of their losses have come on the road.

THE GOOD

Gronk lives...

True, the lasting image of this game will be Rob Gronkowski slowly stumbling and bumbling his way to the pylon without a prayer of catching Kenyon Drake. But before that? Gronk rebounded very nicely from last week's dud. He caught all eight of his targets for 107 yards and his first red zone touchdown of the season. Who knows how many seasons, if any, he's going to play, but those saying he's #done are wrong. Gronk is still a huge part of the Patriots' success this season.

… And so does the rest of the offense

Lost in the loss is the fact that the Patriots offense looked pretty darn good at times. Brady threw for a season-high 358 yards, including 96 to Josh Gordon on five receptions and 86 to Julian Edelman on nine receptions. The running game is still a mixed bag, but things may be starting to click for the Pats' passing game at the perfect time. The Chiefs defense doesn't want this smoke.

Special shout-out

Give it up for linebacker Albert McClellan, who blocked not one, but two, punts for the Patriots in the first half on Sunday. Belichick has always stressed being strong in all three phases of the game, and McClellan, whom the Pats signed in early June, will be looked at to continue that strong play going forward on special teams.

MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL HOSPITAL

If so, you may want to consider participating in a clinical study which will compare the effect on blood sugar levels of two medicines: insulin degludec (100 U/mL) and insulin glargine (100 U/mL), in people with type 2 diabetes.

Why are we doing this study?
Having high or low blood sugar levels can cause many different health problems in people with diabetes. We are doing this study to investigate two different insulins for their ability to keep the blood sugar stable and close to normal.

Why participate in a clinical study?
By participating, you will contribute to improve the treatment options for people with type 2 diabetes. You will also take an active role in your own health-care and you may learn more about the management of your diabetes. All clinical studies have a number of potential benefits but also potential risks. The study doctor will explain these to you before you decide to participate or not.

What will this study look at?
The study participants will be asked to wear a small (35mm x 5mm) blood sugar sensor on the back of the upper arm 3 times during the study.

What do I do next?
The SWITCH PRO study is currently looking for study participants. If you are interested in learning more about the study, please contact the study team:

Aries Know your target and aim high. The more you do now, the easier it will be to justify spending more time with friends and family as the year comes to a close.

Taurus How you deal with others will determine what you get in return. Now's the time to make an adjustment to your schedule to accommodate loved ones.

Gemini Look at the big picture, but don't feel that you must take on more than you can handle. Don't rely on others to take care of your responsibilities.

Cancer Be innovative when it comes to your work and when faced with competition. How you handle others will reflect how you are treated in return. Romance is favored.

Leo You can have fun without going to extremes. Pace yourself and be careful not to make the wrong impression on someone who can influence your life. Take care of business first.

Virgo Get out and get things done. Going on a shopping spree or attending a community event will do you good and bring you closer to a loved one. Romance is highlighted.

Libra Touch base with an old friend or relative. Including isolated people in your plans will be a kind gesture that could change your life.

Scorpio Let your heart lead the way. Share your feelings and vision for the new year. Making plans with a loved one will bring you closer together.

Sagittarius A personal change should be carefully planned before it's executed. Rely on past examples to determine how to best bring about the alterations that will make your world better.

Capricorn Personal gains can be made if you stick to your plan and put everything in order. Last-minute adjustments to the way you handle a pending problem will make a difference.

Aquarius Take better care of yourself. Emotional matters will cause confusion or uncertainty that could lead to a poor financial choice. Don't be too quick to make a move.

Pisces Don't go overboard. Keep your spending to a minimum and refrain from overindulgent behavior. Sticking to a plan and doing your best to balance and stabilize your life will be essential. EUGENIA LAST
